How the complaints changed, 2021 – 2026

Each period was analysed separately and is reproduced in full later in this document. This section sets them side by side. The figure in each cell is that theme's share of all complaints in that period, so columns are comparable even though the periods differ enormously in volume — 2021 yields 28 complaints, 2026 yields 191.

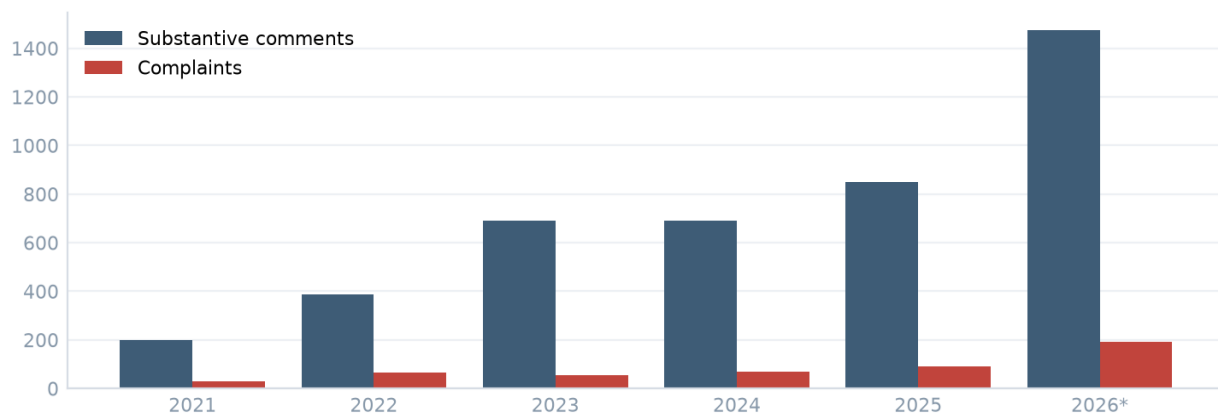

* 2026 covers March – July only; every other column is March – November.

What led each period

Period	Largest complaint theme	Share	Complaints
March – November 2021	Roads & Potholes	25.0%	28
March – November 2022	Trash, Sanitation & Illegal Dumping	21.2%	66
March – November 2023	City Responsiveness & Accountability	19.6%	56
March – November 2024	Schools & Education	20.0%	70
March – November 2025	City Responsiveness & Accountability	15.2%	92
March – July 2026	Taxes & Cost of Living	17.8%	191

Sample size behind each period

The city's pages drew far less engagement early in the decade, so the early periods rest on a much smaller base. Read 2021 and 2022 as indicative of what was being raised, not as precise measurements, and compare shares between periods rather than raw counts.

Reading the comparison

Two caveats govern every number here. First, coverage is not even: Instagram's public feed could not be paged back past March 2023, so 2021 and 2022 are Facebook-only, while later periods draw on both platforms. Second, a theme can fade from the table because the city stopped posting about it, not because residents stopped caring — these are the complaints the city's own posts invited. Where a theme moves sharply, check whether the sample behind it moved too.

March – November 2021

368 comments collected · 199 substantive · 28 complaints (14.1%)

How this was built

Public comments were collected from the City of Yonkers' official Facebook page and Instagram account covering March – November 2021. Every comment was screened for grievance language — complaint markers such as demands to fix something, reports of neglect, questions about why a problem persists, or explicit expressions of frustration. Comments that were purely congratulatory, informational, or off-topic were excluded from the counts.

368 comments were collected. A large share of any city page's replies are emoji, tags and one-word reactions, which express no grievance either way, so the 199 comments carrying actual prose form the base for every rate in this report. Of those, 28 (14.1%) registered as complaints and were sorted into civic categories using a weighted keyword classifier. A single comment can touch more than one issue; it is counted once under its dominant theme, with secondary themes tracked separately under “mentions.”

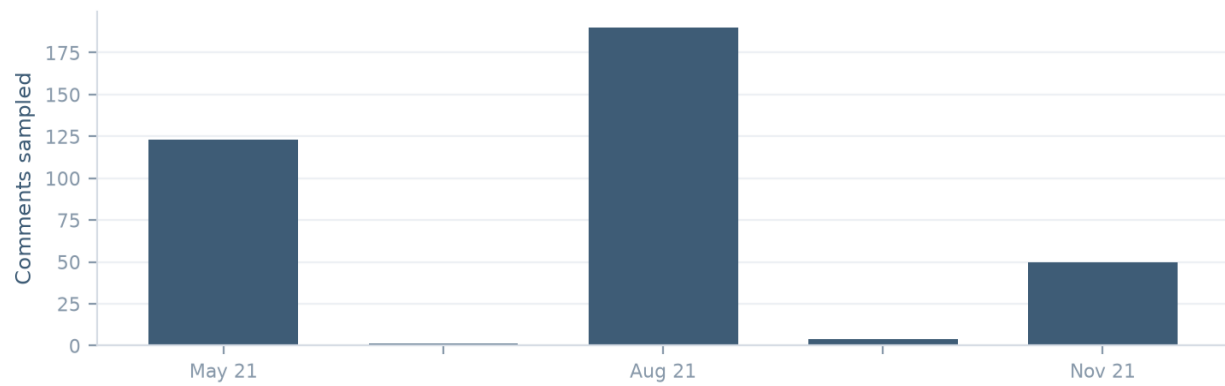

What the numbers do and don't represent

These are the complaints residents chose to post publicly on the city's own channels. They are a strong signal of what frustrates the engaged public, but they are not a representative survey of all Yonkers residents. Comment volume is also shaped by what the city posts about and by moderation. Read the ranking as what dominates the public conversation, not as a measured incidence of each problem across the city.

Collection notes

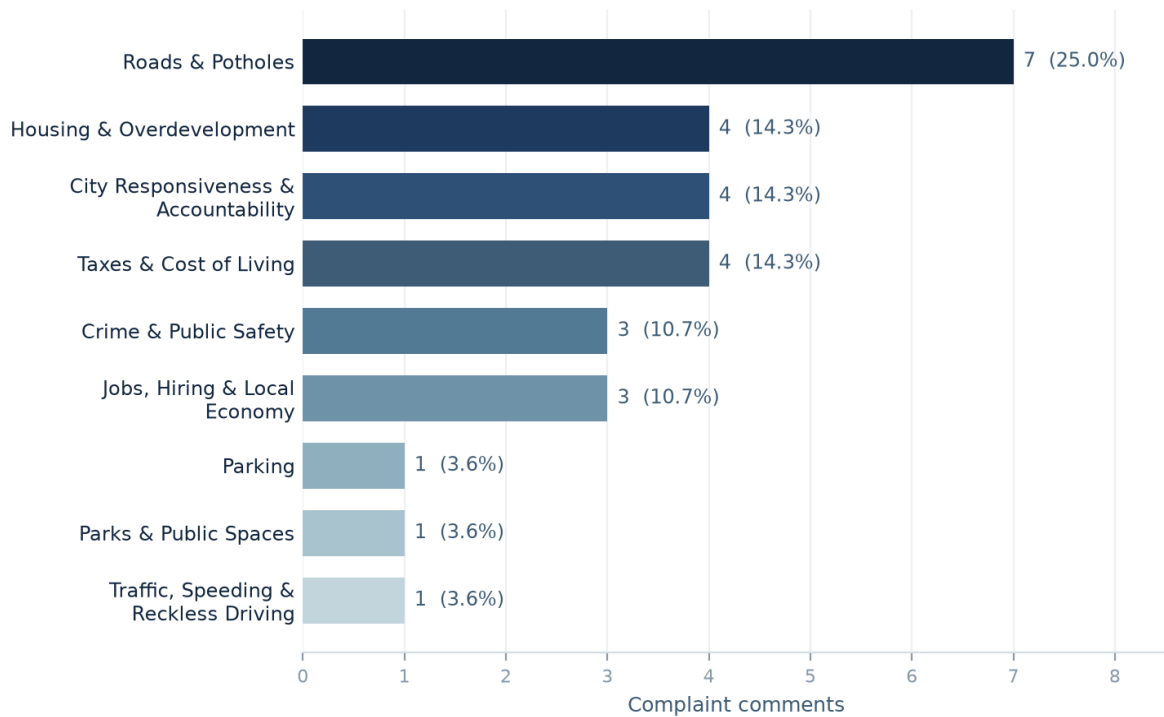

- Coverage for this window: 165 Facebook posts and 0 Instagram posts were sampled. Facebook's public feed is paged in date-bounded slices, so this is a sample of the period rather than every post the city published in it.
- This period is Facebook-only. The Instagram account's public feed could not be paged back past March 2023 - the crawl exhausted at 1,680 posts - so no Instagram comments exist for this window. Later periods draw on both platforms, which is worth remembering when comparing across reports.
- The city's pages drew far less engagement in this period than they do now - many posts carry no comments at all - so the complaint counts here are much smaller than in recent years. Compare shares between periods rather than raw counts.
- Facebook comments were pulled from the most-commented posts inside the window. Heavily discussed posts are over-represented on purpose - that is where grievances collect - so these shares describe the complaint conversation, not the average post.
- Instagram contributes the comments returned alongside each post, a broader but shallower slice than Facebook.
- Emoji-only, tag-only and one-word reactions are counted in the total collected but excluded from the base used for the complaint rate, since they express no grievance either way.
- Comments posted by official city accounts are excluded, as the scrapers surface them alongside residents' replies.
- A category can rank low simply because the city rarely posted about it in this window. Treat the ranking as a measure of the conversation the city's own posts invited, not a census of civic opinion.

The top 9 complaints

Roads & Potholes is the single largest source of complaints, accounting for 25.0% of every grievance posted. The three leading themes — Roads & Potholes, Housing & Overdevelopment, City Responsiveness & Accountability — together make up 54% of all complaints, meaning most of what residents raise on the city's channels concentrates in a handful of recurring issues.

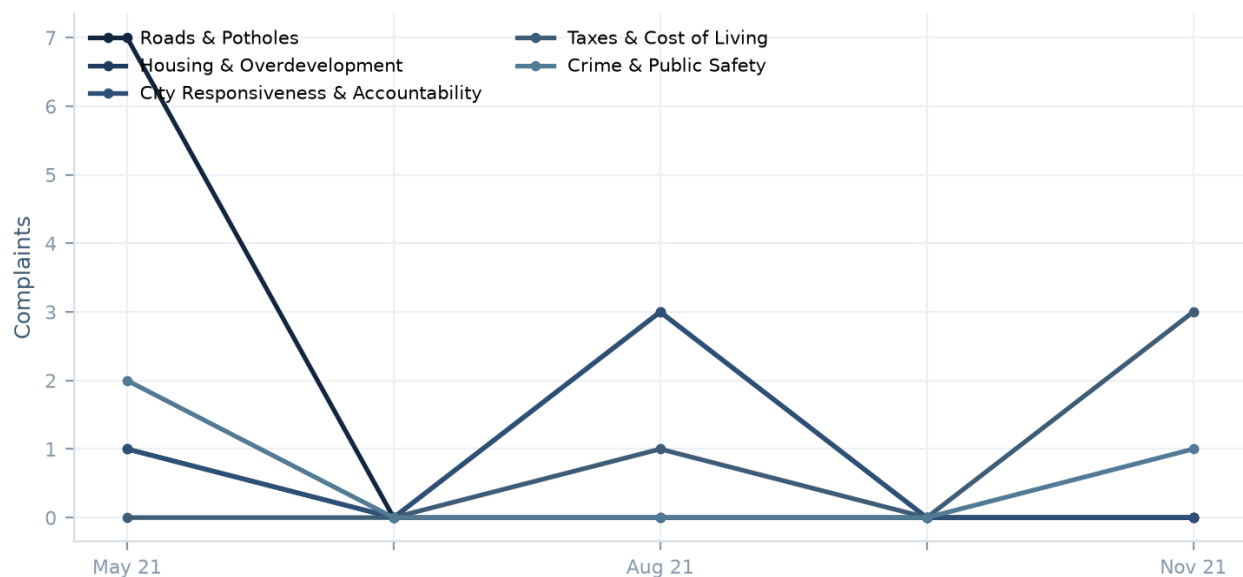

#	Complaint category	Comments	Share	Avg. likes
1	Roads & Potholes	7	25.0%	2.0
2	Housing & Overdevelopment	4	14.3%	3.8
3	City Responsiveness & Accountability	4	14.3%	3.5

How the top issues moved over time

Monthly complaint counts for the five largest categories. Peaks follow a specific triggering event — a snowstorm, a violent incident, a budget vote — that pulls a burst of comment traffic onto the city's posts.

Read month-to-month movement with care. These lines track how much was sampled as much as how much was said — a month with few sampled comments cannot produce many complaints. Check the sampling volume on the methodology page before reading any swing as a real change in resident sentiment.

March – November 2023

1,304 comments collected · 691 substantive · 56 complaints (8.1%)

How this was built

Public comments were collected from the City of Yonkers' official Facebook page and Instagram account covering March – November 2023. Every comment was screened for grievance language — complaint markers such as demands to fix something, reports of neglect, questions about why a problem persists, or explicit expressions of frustration. Comments that were purely congratulatory, informational, or off-topic were excluded from the counts.

1,304 comments were collected. A large share of any city page's replies are emoji, tags and one-word reactions, which express no grievance either way, so the 691 comments carrying actual prose form the base for every rate in this report. Of those, 56 (8.1%) registered as complaints and were sorted into civic categories using a weighted keyword classifier. A single comment can touch more than one issue; it is counted once under its dominant theme, with secondary themes tracked separately under “mentions.”

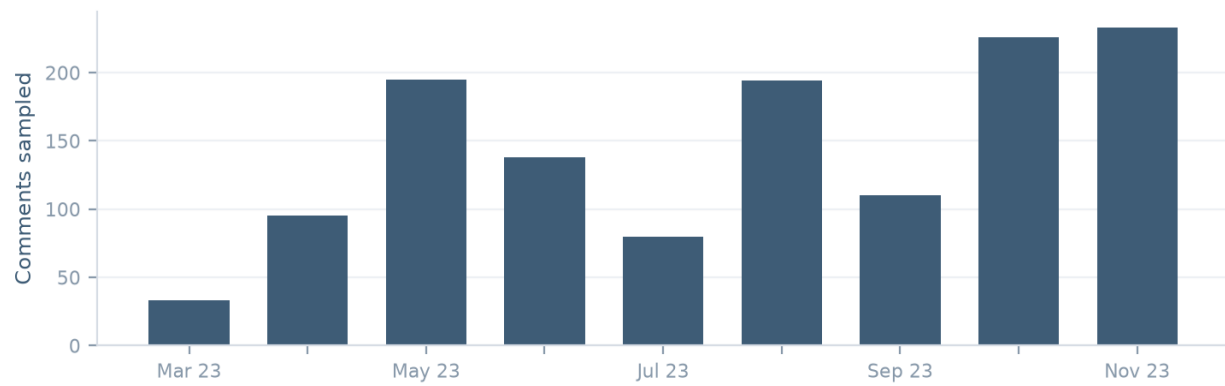

What the numbers do and don't represent

These are the complaints residents chose to post publicly on the city's own channels. They are a strong signal of what frustrates the engaged public, but they are not a representative survey of all Yonkers residents. Comment volume is also shaped by what the city posts about and by moderation. Read the ranking as what dominates the public conversation, not as a measured incidence of each problem across the city.

Collection notes

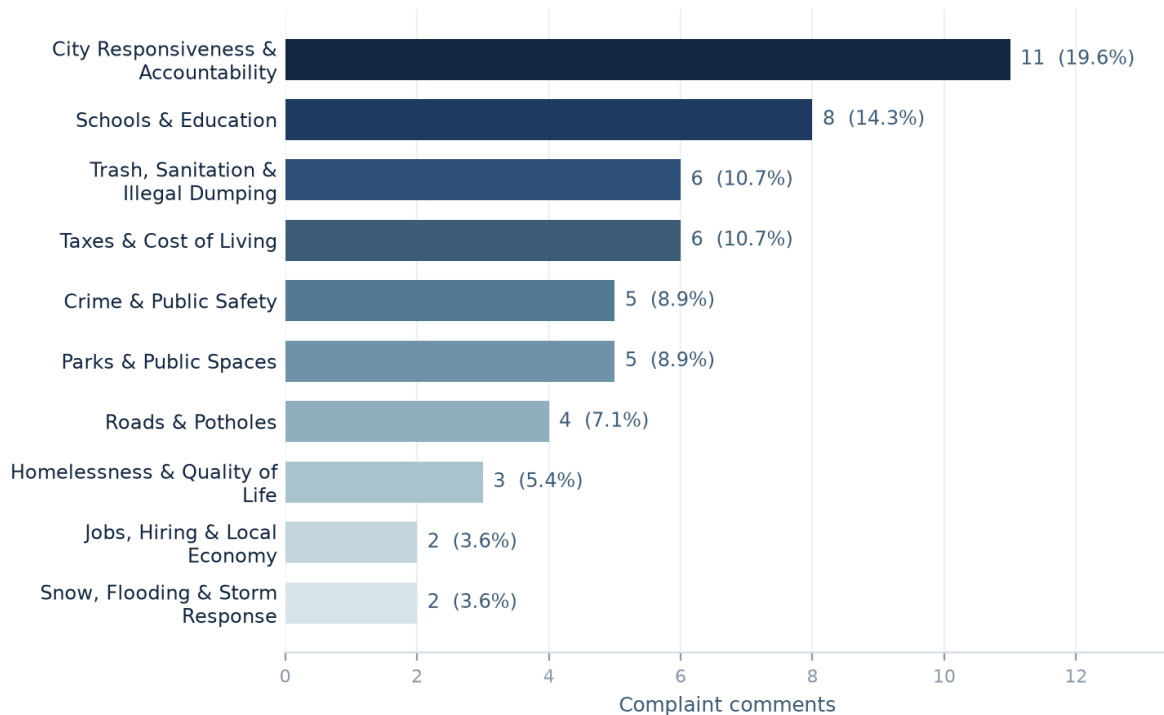

- Coverage for this window: 165 Facebook posts and 732 Instagram posts were sampled. Facebook's public feed is paged in date-bounded slices, so this is a sample of the period rather than every post the city published in it.
- The city's pages drew far less engagement in this period than they do now - many posts carry no comments at all - so the complaint counts here are much smaller than in recent years. Compare shares between periods rather than raw counts.
- Facebook comments were pulled from the most-commented posts inside the window. Heavily discussed posts are over-represented on purpose - that is where grievances collect - so these shares describe the complaint conversation, not the average post.
- Instagram contributes the comments returned alongside each post, a broader but shallower slice than Facebook.
- Emoji-only, tag-only and one-word reactions are counted in the total collected but excluded from the base used for the complaint rate, since they express no grievance either way.
- Comments posted by official city accounts are excluded, as the scrapers surface them alongside residents' replies.
- A category can rank low simply because the city rarely posted about it in this window. Treat the ranking as a measure of the conversation the city's own posts invited, not a census of civic opinion.

The top 10 complaints

City Responsiveness & Accountability is the single largest source of complaints, accounting for 19.6% of every grievance posted. The three leading themes — City Responsiveness & Accountability, Schools & Education, Trash, Sanitation & Illegal Dumping — together make up 45% of all complaints, meaning most of what residents raise on the city's channels concentrates in a handful of recurring issues.

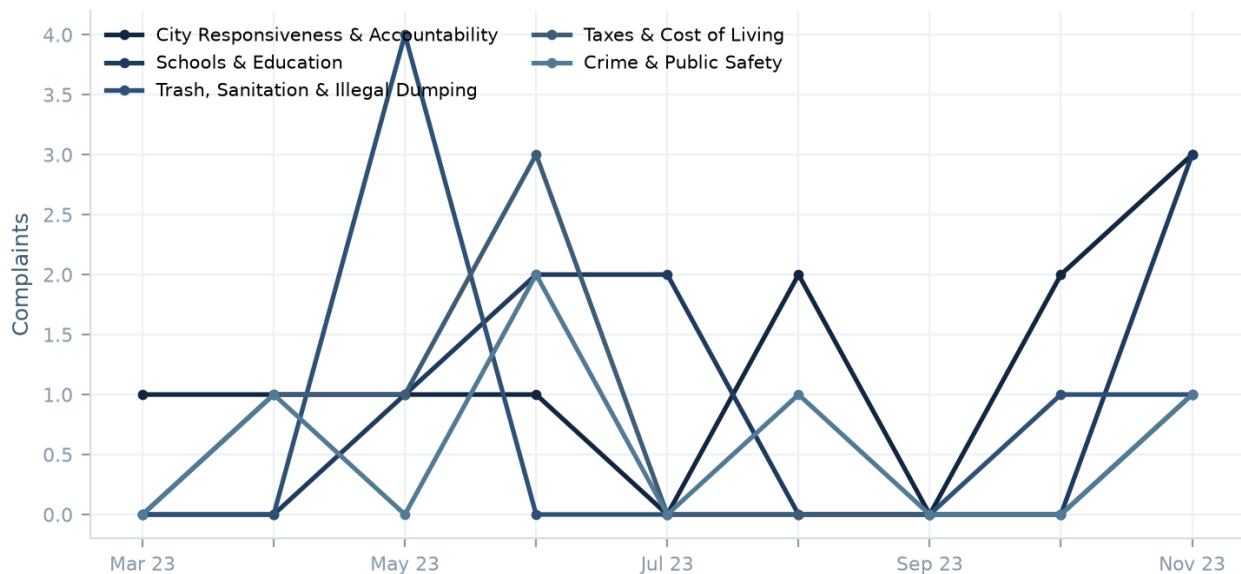

#	Complaint category	Comments	Share	Avg. likes
1	City Responsiveness & Accountability	11	19.6%	1.5
2	Schools & Education	8	14.3%	0.2
3	Trash, Sanitation & Illegal Dumping	6	10.7%	0.3
4	Taxes & Cost of Living	6	10.7%	0.0
5	Crime & Public Safety	5	8.9%	0.4
6	Parks & Public Spaces	5	8.9%	1.4
7	Roads & Potholes	4	7.1%	1.0
8	Homelessness & Quality of Life	3	5.4%	0.0
9	Jobs, Hiring & Local Economy	2	3.6%	1.5

How the top issues moved over time

Monthly complaint counts for the five largest categories. Peaks follow a specific triggering event — a snowstorm, a violent incident, a budget vote — that pulls a burst of comment traffic onto the city's posts.

Read month-to-month movement with care. These lines track how much was sampled as much as how much was said — a month with few sampled comments cannot produce many complaints. Check the sampling volume on the methodology page before reading any swing as a real change in resident sentiment.

March – November 2025

1,456 comments collected · 850 substantive · 92 complaints (10.8%)

How this was built

Public comments were collected from the City of Yonkers' official Facebook page and Instagram account covering March – November 2025. Every comment was screened for grievance language — complaint markers such as demands to fix something, reports of neglect, questions about why a problem persists, or explicit expressions of frustration. Comments that were purely congratulatory, informational, or off-topic were excluded from the counts.

1,456 comments were collected. A large share of any city page's replies are emoji, tags and one-word reactions, which express no grievance either way, so the 850 comments carrying actual prose form the base for every rate in this report. Of those, 92 (10.8%) registered as complaints and were sorted into civic categories using a weighted keyword classifier. A single comment can touch more than one issue; it is counted once under its dominant theme, with secondary themes tracked separately under “mentions.”

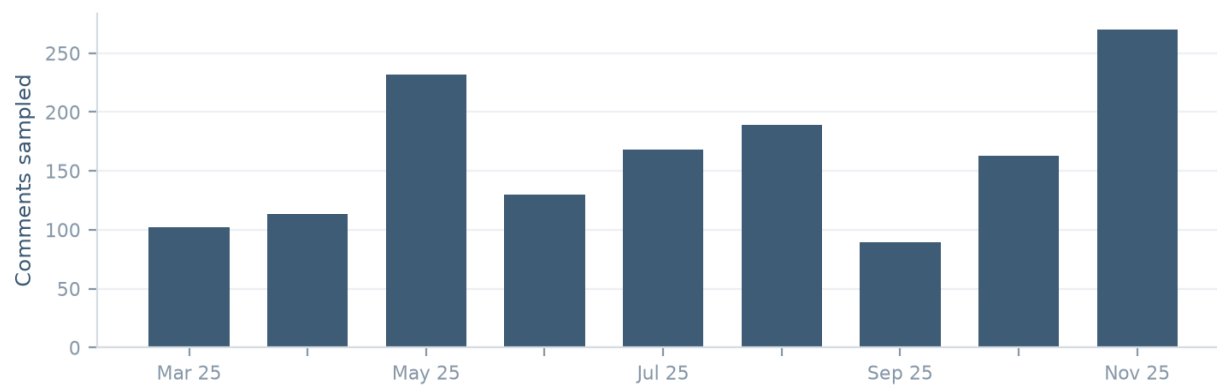

What the numbers do and don't represent

These are the complaints residents chose to post publicly on the city's own channels. They are a strong signal of what frustrates the engaged public, but they are not a representative survey of all Yonkers residents. Comment volume is also shaped by what the city posts about and by moderation. Read the ranking as what dominates the public conversation, not as a measured incidence of each problem across the city.

Collection notes

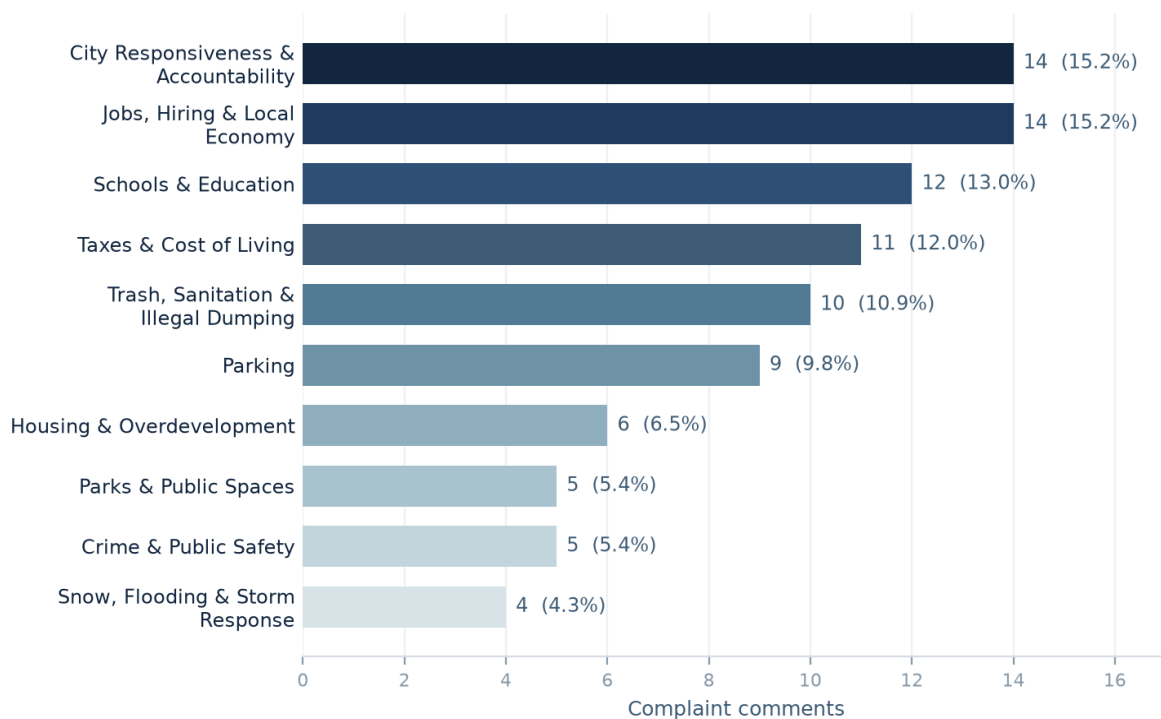

- Coverage for this window: 166 Facebook posts and 207 Instagram posts were sampled. Facebook's public feed is paged in date-bounded slices, so this is a sample of the period rather than every post the city published in it.
- Facebook comments were pulled from the most-commented posts inside the window. Heavily discussed posts are over-represented on purpose - that is where grievances collect - so these shares describe the complaint conversation, not the average post.
- Instagram contributes the comments returned alongside each post, a broader but shallower slice than Facebook.
- Emoji-only, tag-only and one-word reactions are counted in the total collected but excluded from the base used for the complaint rate, since they express no grievance either way.
- Comments posted by official city accounts are excluded, as the scrapers surface them alongside residents' replies.
- A category can rank low simply because the city rarely posted about it in this window. Treat the ranking as a measure of the conversation the city's own posts invited, not a census of civic opinion.

Comments sampled by month

The top 10 complaints

City Responsiveness & Accountability is the single largest source of complaints, accounting for 15.2% of every grievance posted. The three leading themes — City Responsiveness & Accountability, Jobs, Hiring & Local Economy, Schools & Education — together make up 43% of all complaints, meaning most of what residents raise on the city's channels concentrates in a handful of recurring issues.

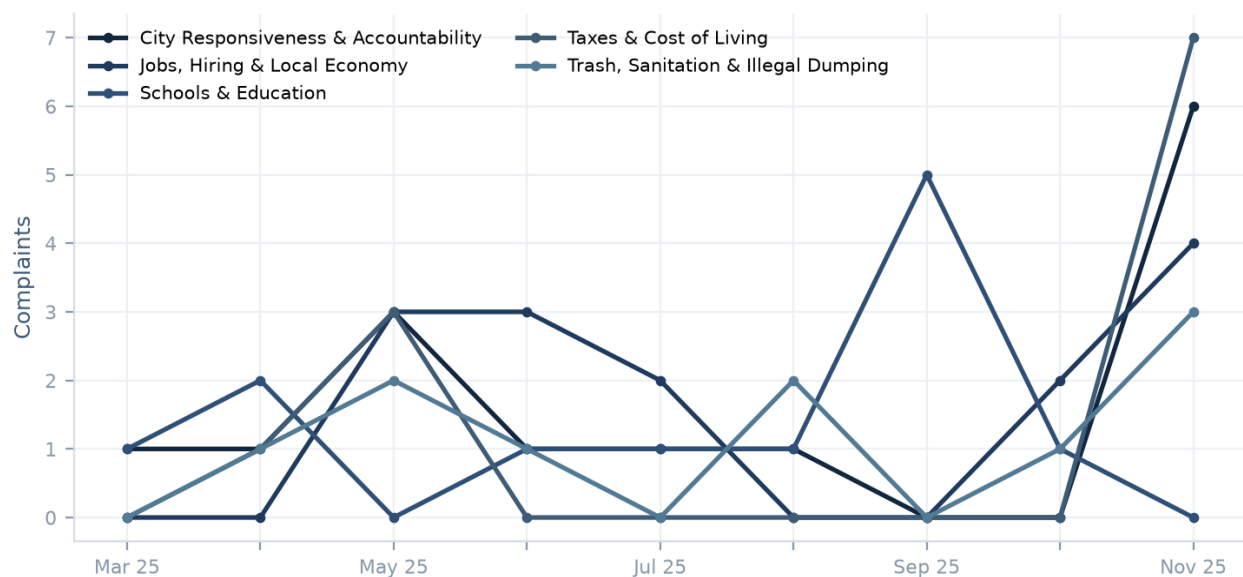

#	Complaint category	Comments	Share	Avg. likes
1	City Responsiveness & Accountability	14	15.2%	1.6
2	Jobs, Hiring & Local Economy	14	15.2%	2.0
3	Schools & Education	12	13.0%	0.8
4	Taxes & Cost of Living	11	12.0%	4.3
5	Trash, Sanitation & Illegal Dumping	10	10.9%	2.8
6	Parking	9	9.8%	0.3
7	Housing & Overdevelopment	6	6.5%	2.8
8	Parks & Public Spaces	5	5.4%	4.2
9	Crime & Public Safety	5	5.4%	0.2
10	Snow, Flooding & Storm Response	4	4.3%	8.2

How the top issues moved over time

Monthly complaint counts for the five largest categories. Peaks follow a specific triggering event — a snowstorm, a violent incident, a budget vote — that pulls a burst of comment traffic onto the city's posts.

Read month-to-month movement with care. These lines track how much was sampled as much as how much was said — a month with few sampled comments cannot produce many complaints. Check the sampling volume on the methodology page before reading any swing as a real change in resident sentiment.
